"Circumstantial Evidence."

There was a certain heart-sinking look about he seedy stranger, as Mr. Talbot told him he was in need of no help in his ware-house, which aused that gentleman to look up again from his ledger and eye the young man more closely. With a half audible sigh, and with an air of opeless, utter despondency, the object of his scruting turned to leave the counting room.

To PRESERVE GRAPMS -- Pack them in ash saw dust, and a so as to get rid of the tines. A lay ero. dust is first placed in the box, the a layer of grapes closely packed, thes a layer of dust, so on til the bex is full, which may be covered without any reference to its being air tight. The ash saw dust has no peculiar preservative quality, and is selected only because it does not effect the taste of the grape. The information is valuable, and the process simple.

MANURING FRUIT TREES. - Many fruit trees which have been considered valueless, may be recovered by being manured in the fall and winter; and during warm days, when the surface of the soil is not frozen, even stimulating manures may be applied with impunity, and covered with earth. Thus Peruvian guano, now applied, will be so divided through the soil ber and Mill screws; by spring, as not to injure the young spongioles from the roots when they re sume growth; whereas, if appled after the spring growth commences, the spongioles would be injured.
